Winning in poker is commonly assumed to be a matter of luck. Most comments on a poker winning usually relates to how lucky one is with winning the games, especially when they are frequently outplaying every time or most of the time. Though luck has a substantial role in poker, the luck part of the game ends with the pockets. The rest of the cards in the community board are still a matter of chance and skillful application of poker tips in the play.

Poker tips are a lot more than superstitions and false beliefs; truly poker is a game that should be played without considering luck as any substantial element. A true poker player knows that poker is a lot of mathematics and there is no element of luck in it. They replace the term luck with probability. Poker is totally associated with probability and not at all with anything called luck. Before thinking or commenting about some playing having won with pure luck, please revise and reconsider the way the idea is being expressed. If one keeps telling that they are losing because they are unlucky, the solid truth is that luck is going to never knock doors. And anyone that says they are unlucky are going to remain unlucky for the rest of their poker life unless they make some substantial steps and some poker schooling to eventually improve their performance in poker. Poker schooling is going to give lot of poker tips to eventually excel with solid math skills. Poker tips are not really anything that teaches one to sit on a handkerchief to win the game or to keep a Chinese frog besides to make a winning. Poker tips are solid mathematical tips that say when to hang on to play and when to leave the table in a short and precise manner. Little bits of poker tips make a mighty ocean of ideas to play poker; however, there is going to be no point in making a full book of poker tips without a clear understanding of how to use them efficiently. Learning poker tips is a good beginning; do not over do learning poker tips. Whenever a poker tip is being studied one must make some basic attempts to understand how it applies in a real time play. Learning is a lot different from applying it in a real time play.
